Gregory Rehmke directs programs for Economic Thinking.

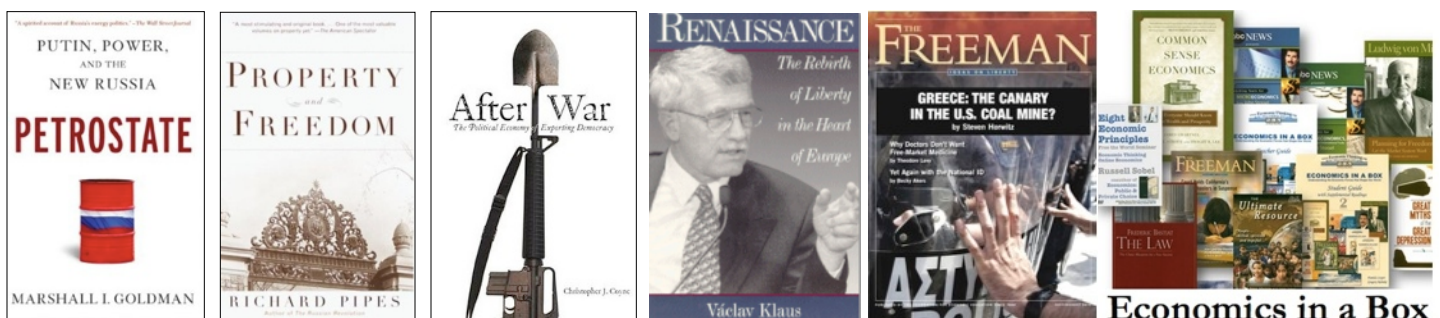

Join us for an Economic Thinking Workshop exploring economics, current events, and international issues. Should Americans be worried about economic development in China and India? Or is the lack of economic development in Russia a bigger concern? Should U.S. policy promote democracy around the world, including in Russia and former Soviet republics? Or should U.S. policy instead promote economic freedom? Should government's continue to control or guide major industries—as both the U.S. and Russian governments currently do?

For students researching U.S./Russia debate topic, this workshop will also discuss Russian history and institutions, including Russia's long and destructive experience under communism. Presentations will discuss government legitimacy, popular sovereignty, and protecting rights.

Join us for a day in the world of ideas!
