

Free the World Seminar 2010

Economics - History - Geography

July 26-28, 9 am-4 pm, Independent School

Join us for three days in the world of ideas!

$75 for adults, $50 student • Limited space! • Lunch break 12-1 pm (lunch not included)

After so many decades of prosperity in the U.S., Europe, and Japan, why are so many people in Latin America and Africa still poor? What lessons can students learn from recent rapid economic growth in China and India? Can U.S. firms and workers compete with low-wage workers in China, India, and other countries?

Sessions apply economic principles to current events and international issues, and are designed for economics, geography, and other social studies teachers.

Presentations will include video clips, handouts, lesson plans and will some active-learning simulations led by Gabriella Megyesi.

Teachers attending receive free lesson plans and educational videos from various education organizations. Additional two days of videos and lessons included.

- Gabriella Megyesi taught economics at the Britannica International School in Budapest, Hungary, and earlier taught economics (in English) at Alternatív Közgazdasági Gimnázium, a Hungary's first private school after the fall of communism. She currently develops course materials on economics and entrepreneurship, as well as speaking regularly for Economic Thinking and the Foundation for Teaching Economics seminars.

- Gregory Rehmke directs programs for Economic Thinking and lectures at seminars for the Foundation for Economic Education, the Independent Institute, and the Institute for Economic Studies-Europe. He is coauthor of The Complete Idiot's Guide to Global Economics.
